Third grade teacher Heather Hemeyer, class of 2008, isn’t just teaching math, reading and spelling at St. Joseph’s Indian School in Chamberlain, S.D. She’s teaching children the skills they need to build a better tomorrow.
According to an analysis by the National Center for Children in Poverty, nearly one in six children in South Dakota – a staggering 34,000 kids across the state – are impacted by poverty. The poverty label, by definition, is attached to households reporting an annual income at or below $22,050 for a family of four.

Of those, a large number are Native Americans who live in areas categorized as among the poorest in the U.S. – counties like Shannon and Ziebach in rural South Dakota.

For these children, the financial strains their families face all-too-often leave their mark – from malnourishment to cognitive delays, behavioral disorders, abuse and neglect.

By the time they enter school, many have already endured a lifetime’s worth of heartache and struggle. Many find the structure and expectations of classroom work difficult. Teaching children in need can be challenging, too.

But for Heather Hemeyer, class of 2008 and a third grade teacher at St. Joseph’s Indian School in Chamberlain, S.D., the challenges are worth it.

“There are a lot of late nights … if a child is having problems, you stay late to try to provide comfort. It’s important to build those relationships.”

For Hemeyer, she’s looking forward to implementing what she’s learning in the program online, we’re able to accommodate the busy lives of adult learners while making the dream of a master’s degree a reality for teachers in rural areas.”

Augustana is currently accepting applications for its second Master of Arts in Education Online Degree Program, for which classes will begin in June 2012. Applications are due by Wednesday, Feb. 15, 2012. To learn more, visit www.augie.edu/graduate.

For Hemeyer, she’s looking forward to implementing what she’s learning through the program in her classroom.

“This program has given me the chance to further my education and not have to worry about traveling somewhere else to do it. I couldn’t ask for more.”
